Dear Chairmen Moran and Rogers and Ranking Members Van Hollen and Meng:

As the undersigned national, state, and local organizations, we write to express our strong support for continued funding of the Justice and Mental Health Collaboration Program (JMHCP) in the FY 2026 Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies appropriation bill.

As a program with bipartisan support, JMHCP supports initiatives for people with mental illnesses and co-occurring mental health and substance use disorders who interact with the justice system. For nearly 20 years, JMHCP grantees have helped promote public safety and save public resources by safely diverting people from the criminal justice system into treatment and comprehensive support services. These programs also provide training for law enforcement and other public safety officials while fostering collaboration between justice and treatment professionals. Ultimately, through these efforts, many communities have been able to reduce state and local costs on public safety while improving outcomes for the people affected by mental illnesses and substance use disorders.

Originally enacted in 2004, JMHCP was reauthorized in 2008, 2016, and 2022 through the Mentally Ill Offender Treatment and Crime Reduction Act with broad bipartisan support. Two years after the initial legislation was passed, JMHCP launched and has since funded more than 800 grants across 50 states, plus the District of Columbia, Guam, American Samoa, and the Northern Mariana Islands.

State and local governments use JMHCP grants for a broad range of activities, including establishing crisis intervention teams, prosecutor-led diversion, holistic defense, mental health court programs, creating or expanding community-based treatment programs, supporting the development of curricula for police academies and orientations, and providing treatment and transitional services in jails. Crisis intervention teams, alongside other evidence-based practices authorized under the legislation, such as treatment courts, have demonstrated success in reducing recidivism, enhancing public safety, and allowing criminal justice resources to be more effectively allocated for traditional crime fighting purposes.

By investing in JMHCP programs, law enforcement officers across the country are better equipped to handle calls involving people with mental illnesses or co-occurring disorders. JMHCP has made it possible for them to access training designed to help them handle complex situations involving people with behavioral health needs in crisis. It has also funded co-response teams, so that a behavioral health clinician is there right alongside law enforcement, where safe, to help defuse a crisis and make a warm connection to needed treatment. It has also funded crisis receiving centers, which create a safe alternative to jail for people in crisis. Additionally, through its funding for peer learning, JMHCP has made it possible for law enforcement and their behavioral health partners to learn from each other and others doing this work.

Our criminal justice partners cannot keep our communities safe and strong without mental health and substance use collaboration. JMHCP fosters the sort of partnership and innovation that helps identify and treat the behavioral health needs that often bring people into contact with police, the courts, and jail. It recognizes that the most efficient way to solve a complex problem is to bring leaders together around a shared goal and help them apply national best practices to local priorities.

We are grateful for your longstanding commitment and leadership in ensuring that our communities are kept safe through responsible and smart initiatives, and we respectfully ask for your continued support of the crucial Justice and Mental Health Collaboration Program in the FY 2026 Commerce, Justice, Science, and Related Agencies appropriation bill.
